

The man looks curious, it seems as if he is debating on whether to touch it or not. Personally, I think that he should contemplate touching it or not, with someone who understands more about eggs, creatures and flowers. A dirty, abandoned tunnel seems like an unpreferable place to place something that is precious which gives you the idea that whatever left the "flower" here, did not find it valuable. Judging by how the man is standing, I believe that the man is interested to know what is inside. The flower has a green aura and is glowing, possibly, to catch people's attention. Above the tunnel, there is a small fence, guarding off acces, which could imply that the tunnel is actually sewer. Given that this is in the countryside, the fence could be guarding another piece of land or a factory which could be causing smog. The dog beside that man looks confused too, I have determined this by the fact that the dog's head is tilted. In the centre of the flower, there is a tinge of yellow signifying that there could be something special in the bud.